Dear praying friends,

Music Camp

It's a joy to greet you again from the Pame mountains of San Luis Potosi. Since my last letter, the church here has hosted a music camp. I served as assistant music theory teacher and began learning the ukulele – a great blessing that will be useful in the future.

Translator's School

We also had the privilege of hosting a group from the Translator's School, consisting of 26 people, including 12 current students. Despite challenging weather conditions, including heat up to 103 degrees, they worked tirelessly on the clinic and church auditorium. I was blessed by their attitude and had meaningful conversations with the young ladies about their hopes and prayers for future projects.

Medical Brigade

During Translator's School's visit, we provided physical and spiritual help to over 30 community members through a medical brigade. The young people completed the intake forms for the patients while Dr. Santos provided consultations, I assisted, writing and filling prescriptions and afterward each patient heard a clear presentation of the gospel.

Translation work

I've been working with two teams: one revising the book of John and the other translating hymns. We've made significant progress, including revising three hymns and completing a tract revision. Our translation team is averaging ten verses a day. Dr. Santos is allowing me to lead these teams to help me gain more experience in this work, praise God for this ministry and their willingness to invest in others!

I'm grateful for the opportunity not just to translate for but also to interact with the X'iu'I community every day. God has been so good, I was even able to share the gospel with two X'iu'I ladies, Vero and Adelina, just yesterday. I am grateful for their salvation! Even so, my heart returns to the Philippines, where I pray on day, the Aeta will have the Word of God in their language also.

Challenges

We're currently facing challenges with unreliable water and electricity sources, this last outage lasted three days and power just returned a couple of days ago. Please pray for God's provision and strength. Thank you for holding the rope while I'm serving on this mountain!

Working for His Word,

Faith Duke
